Discovering the camera during my burn-out period changed my life and made me live more consciously. I quit living in the rat race. From a docile and safe living according to the standard living patterns, I now determine my own life path by myself.

To take adventure with my camera, has stolen my heart, changed the way I look at things and objects in the world and I discovered beautiful art in everyday life. Now I'm awake and feel freedom to develop myself in an artistic and free way. I see the world in my own way, especially seeing lines and patterns everywhere. I feel free to get to know and grow myself personally. I want to use the talents of my creative right brain and look for new inspiration everywhere. The right hemisphere contains our intuition, feelings, phrases and impressions. My heart and power is into making photoart and the architectural photography.

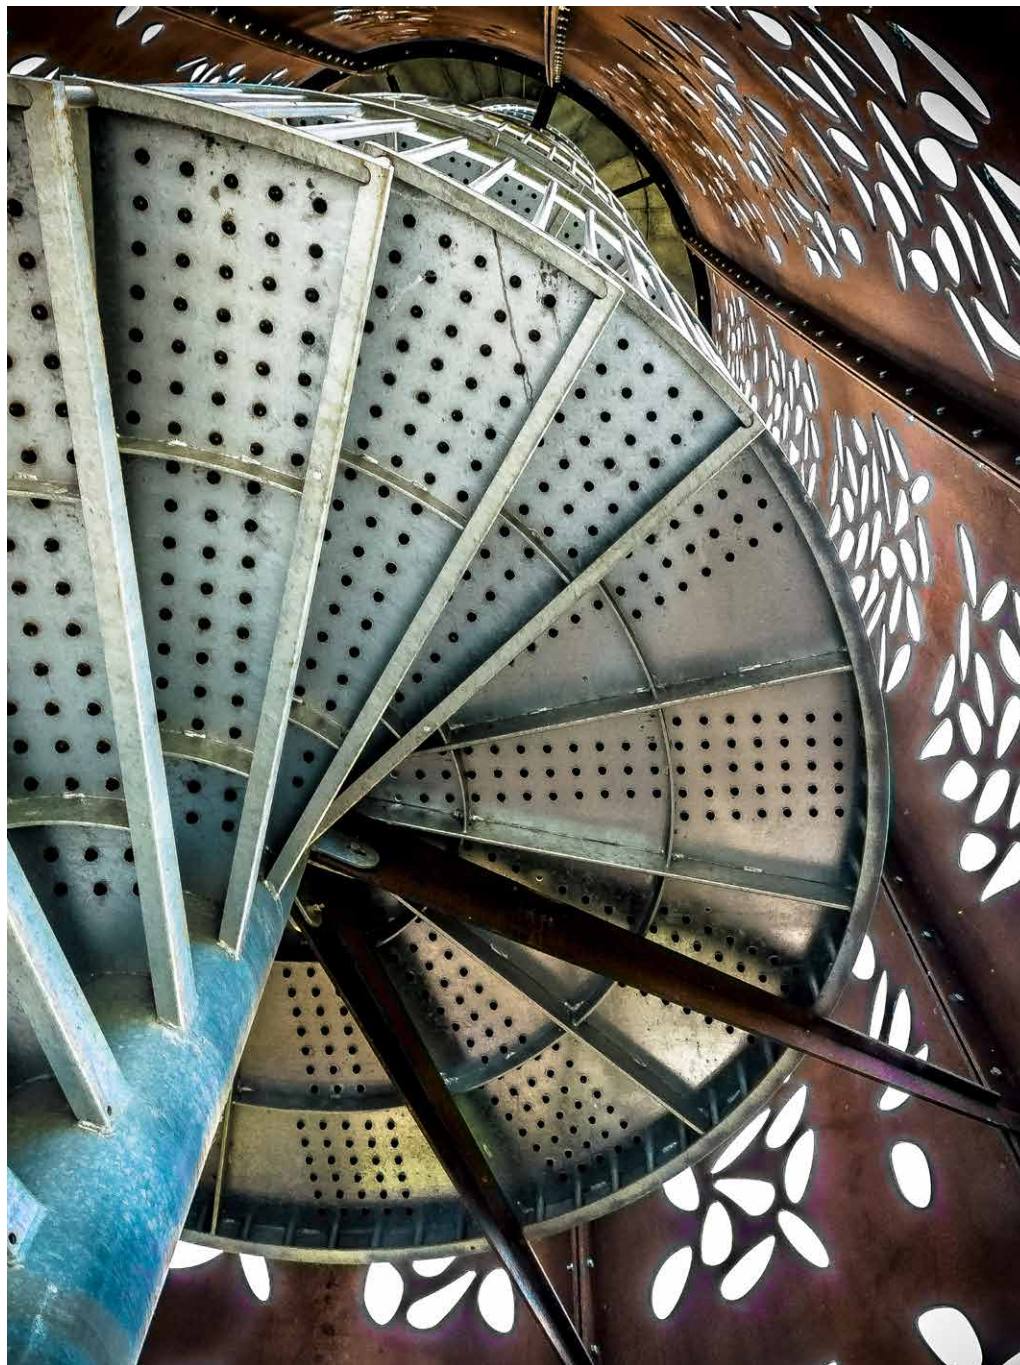

I recognize my style in the Straight Photography movement, or honest photography. This movement from art history sees the special in the ordinary and pays a lot of attention to sharpness, detailing and image excerpt. The images have their own reality.

Expressing myself in this form of photography is my strength and it's a kind of mindfulness for me, it allows me to be more aware in the now. I prefer to photograph on my own, then everything comes from me. I want to follow my own path. It allows me to determine my own freedom which world I want to see. I want to discover other countries and view the world through my camera. But I can also see the beauty of the ordinary in everyday life, just around the corner.

I also hope to inspire other people when they look at my work to determine your own world and to make the choice for your own freedom within your own frameworks. If you look carefully to the world and live more consciously, you can give this personal gift to yourself.
